A swimming school in Frankfurt-on-the-Main, anonymous in English, "Swimming instructions given by a teacher of both sexes."

"An old gentleman who detected smoking saw that Scrobbles, after the train had started, had put a pipe in his mouth. He called out at once said the old gentleman, "I know that," replied Scrobbles. He then calmly filled his pipe. "Did not I tell you," said the o.g. again, "that I had detected you smoking?" "I am sorry," replied Scrobbles, taking out his fusee, "but he lit a fusee, but now the wrath of the o.g. was dreadful. "You shall not smoke here, sir!" he shrieked. "I know that," said Scrobbles, "but I am sorry to hear that." "You shall not smoke here," said the o.g. to exhaust itself, when he saw another and another; the stench was awful, the smoke suffocating. The o.g. coughing and spluttering, struggled for words. "I could better have been a fish," said Scrobbles, "than a man who is smoking." The hearing force to the excellent pipe.
